 (D) Doris, who is lucky enough to win the prize .

Rats have been around for thousands of years. For most of that time, rats have coexisted with humans. Humans waste a lot of food and this is good for rats because they eat everything. Rats can carry more than sixty different kinds of diseases, and carried the fleas which caused the Bubonic Plague. Except people who keep rats as pets, most people don’t want them around.

On Monday, July 2nd, a rat caused some mischief on the MRT. In the morning, a rat got on the MRT at Da’an Park Station. Passengers who noticed the rat cried and started running to the other carriages. The passengers in the other carriages didn’t know about the rat. Suddenly, some uninformed passengers began saying , “It was another knife attack like the one in 2014.” This then caused panic throughout the entire train. When the train stopped at Da’an Station, a group of scared passengers tried to get off the train hurriedly. People fell down and were stepped on, and two people were hurt. However, the rat ran away and didn’t know what had happened.

Have you ever thought about eating ant eggs for breakfast? Ant eggs? That's it! They are the latest culinary trend in Indonesia. Some people boil them, and others put them in salads. They do your bodies good. Ant eggs are rich in protein and vitamins, but low in fat. It is said that they are better than beef, and they don't make greenhouse gas.

How do ant keepers in Indonesia get ant eggs? They put ants in clear jars, and then the jars are placed in a warm and humid room. High temperature and humidity are needed for these ants to lay eggs. After the ants have laid eggs, the keepers take them out and sell them at the markets. They were sold so well that keepers can produce 140 kilograms of ant eggs every month.

So what do ant eggs taste like? Indonesians say they taste like a boiled chicken egg. Besides boiling, frying is another good way. In Colombia, ant eggs are sold like popcorn at theaters.

According to the U.N., ant eggs create jobs in many countries and feed millions of hungry people in the world.

Stephen Hawking was born in 1942 in England. His parents were very smart. They studied at Oxford (牛津大學). Stephen was very smart, too. His friends at school called him "Einstein." However, he was also very lazy. He often didn't finish his work, so his grades were bad. Still, he loved math.

Stephen wanted to go to Oxford. He wanted to study math there. Oxford didn't offer math, though. So, he chose physics. He got 100 points on his physics test and got a scholarship to Oxford.

At Oxford, Stephen didn't study much. He thought his classes and tests were too easy. For Stephen, this was true. He didn't need to study. If something was possible, Stephen could do it. He didn't need to learn how.

After Oxford, Stephen went to Cambridge (劍橋大學). He started to study space there. It wasn't very easy. Then, when he was 21, he got sick. Doctors told him he had ALS. He only had two years to live. Stephen wanted to give up then. However, his teachers told him to keep working.

Stephen worked harder. He studied black holes, and he discovered new things about them. He also discovered new things about space and time. After two years, he didn't die. Instead, he became famous.

Stephen wanted more people to learn about space and time. So, he wrote many books. They made space easy to understand. To him, that was the most important work. He wanted everyone to "remember to look up at the stars and not down at your feet."
