The resources of any one place are limited. Depending on which plants and animals share the land, there may not be enough of everything to go around. All organisms need water, food and shelter to stay alive. These resources are important for the organisms. When an environment is low on any of these things, organisms must fight for them. Those who get to the resources first have the best chance to keep alive. Being without water, food or shelter for very long is bad and deciding to organisms. The resources in an area decide how big the plant and animal populations can be. Sometimes there are too many living things in an area. The weakest of the populations will not be able to get the resources they need. As the weak die out, the populations get smaller. Finally, the area's resources will be back one day and can be enough for organisms again. Sometimes people will catch members of large animal populations and move them. They take them to another place with less competition. This helps to keep more animals. Sometimes the government will let people go hunting of large animal populations. Deer and rabbits can be a good food source for people. When there are too many of these animals in an area, they sometimes come into the cities looking for food. They often cause trouble. Hunting keeps the number of animals under control.
