(Keith is showing Holly a new video game.)

Keith: You have to play this video game, Holly! It's called Animal Crossing: New Horizons.

Holly: Why? What's so special about it?

Keith: It's really fun, and it has a lot of cute animals.

Holly: Oh, I like cute animals. Do I have to take care of and feed them?

Keith: No. The cute animals are the other "people" in the game.

Holly: Wait. They are the people? Then, am I a cute animal, too?

Keith: No. You're a kid, and you're between 9 and 13 years old.

Holly: So, what is the point of the game?

(Keith and Holly keep talking about the game.)

Keith: The main thing is to build your home. I made my home really nice.

Holly: That sounds cool. How do you do that?

Keith: Well, you get a tent at the beginning of the game.

Holly: Let me guess. You do things to make money, and then you can buy a house.

Keith: That's right. The other big thing is to make friends with other people.

Holly: Really? Can I talk to them in the game?

Keith: Yes. You can also do things together and help each other.

Holly: So, it's just like real life.

Peter's parents were very angry after seeing his smartphone bill. They told him to change the habit of using his smartphone, or they would take it away. This is not convenient for modern people, especially for teenagers. To stop this from happening, Peter is now trying to solve the problem about using his smartphone.

First of all, Peter found surfing the Internet cost him the most money. He often visited social media, like Facebook or Instagram because he wanted to know what his family and friends were doing. He was surprised to learn he seldom made phone calls, so it cost him little money. The rest of his bill was watching TV shows and movies, playing games, and sending text messages. After knowing more about his habits, he thought he should use free Wi-Fi more often when surfing the Internet, because it cost him nothing. What's more, he would only make calls on his smartphone when he needed to do that with someone right away. This is because it is free to make calls by Line with Wi-Fi. In this way, he thinks he can save a lot of money.
